특자의 소리

물리학과 박오영 교수

수술공 원칙과 그 한계

When I had decided to come to Daedeon as an English Village Course group leader, I could not have foreseen the experience I would gain during the 5 weeks of the course. Originally, after graduating from university last June, I had planned to take a vacation rather than work. However, I am grateful to have had the opportunity to meet such fine students and factually meet them here at KAIST.

The university life at KAIST, I found, is not very different from that of American university life. Every student seems to be involved in some “circle”, whether it is in swimming, music or special interesting groups. Furthermore, similarly to students in America, they are very active with academies by being involved in research and graduate studies. After finishing the 8 hour a day in the EVC program, they often rush off to meetings with their professors, appointments with their peers or to their dorms to finish their homework.

In fact, in many ways the students are more energetic and passionate about their daily lives. Even in 30 degree and 99% humidity weather conditions, the students seem even more driven to study and play. As a group leader, I was often motivated by the students’ enthusiasm during times when I felt bogged down by the heat. I appreciated their enthusiasm for wanting to learn English and sometimes chatted with them about being a student in Korea. I have never seen such devotion among college students anywhere.

One aspect about Korean college life which I admire most is the relationship between seniors and juniors. In America,

Eternal Memory in KAIST

When I had decided to come to Daedeon as an English Village Course group leader, I could not have foreseen the experience I would gain during the 5 weeks of the course. Originally, after graduating from university last June, I had planned to take a vacation rather than work. However, I am grateful to have had the opportunity to meet such fine students and factually meet them here at KAIST.

The university life at KAIST, I found, is not very different from that of American university life. Every student seems to be involved in some “circle”, whether it is in swimming, music or special interesting groups. Furthermore, similarly to students in America, they are very active with academies by being involved in research and graduate studies. After finishing the 8 hour a day in the EVC program, they often rush off to meetings with their professors, appointments with their peers or to their dorms to finish their homework.

In fact, in many ways the students are more energetic and passionate about their daily lives. Even in 30 degree and 99% humidity weather conditions, the students seem even more driven to study and play. As a group leader, I was often motivated by the students’ enthusiasm during times when I felt bogged down by the heat. I appreciated their enthusiasm for wanting to learn English and sometimes chatted with them about being a student in Korea. I have never seen such devotion among college students anywhere.

One aspect about Korean college life which I admire most is the relationship between seniors and juniors. In America,